

EAT WELL

Boston Food System Guide

The American Planning Association's Planning and Community Health Research Center collaborated with Eat Well Guide, a free online directory of fresh, locally grown and sustainably produced food in the United States and Canada, and the Tufts Food System Planning Coalition, to provide you with information about the Boston Food System. This guide provides you with a partial list of some of the city's food related organizations, community gardens, farmers' markets, food stores, restaurants and breweries. For a map of the food stores, markets, restaurants and breweries, visit: <http://tinyurl.com/bostonfoodsystem>.

The majority of farmers' market and restaurant listings for this guide were provided by Eat Well Guide. By creating local connections among consumers and producers of fresh, sustainable food, Eat Well Guide seeks to increase access to healthy food, and expand markets for socially responsible farmers and other food producers. Together with the enterprising spirits of independent farmers, locally owned businesses and partner organizations, Eat Well Guide's collaborative technology harnesses the power of the web to effect social, environmental and economic change, and maps the route to a more sustainable food system. For more information, or to suggest a listing to Eat Well Guide, visit <http://www.eatwellguide.org>.

Additional listings and information about the larger food system were compiled and written by Christina DiLisio, graduate student in the Urban & Environmental Policy & Planning Department at Tufts University and member of the Tufts Food Systems Planning Coalition.

FOOD SYSTEMS RESOURCES

Boston Natural Areas Network

<http://bostonnatural.org/>

Organized in 1977, the mission of Boston Natural Areas Network (BNAN) is to “preserve, expand and improve urban open space through community organizing, acquisition, ownership, programming, development and management of special kinds of urban land.” BNAN provides tools and training through such programs as SLUG (Students Learning through Urban Gardening), MUG (Master Urban Gardener), and Seed, Sow & Grow.

Groundwork Somerville

<http://www.groundworksomerville.org/>

Groundwork Somerville (GWS) is a leader in the area on community and youth-centered activities relating to food systems and the environment. Their mission, “to bring about the sustained regeneration, improvement and management of the physical environment through the development of community-based partnerships which empower people, businesses and organizations to promote environmental, economic and social well-being” informs their many programs. Programs like the newly launched Human Capital Campaign, the green jobs youth program, and the “Green Infrastructure Research Project” have earned GWS much praise.

Haley House

<http://www.haleyhouse.org/>

Started in 1966 as an informal shelter where the homeless men of Tremont Street could get a meal and a place to sleep, Haley House soon developed into a full-service soup kitchen, and now functions as an incorporated non-profit whose programs “address root causes of joblessness as well as offer vital support to individuals transitioning out of homelessness.” With the help of dedicated volunteers, and individuals like chef Didi Emmons, Haley House offers a number of cooking classes geared towards challenged youth and transitioning persons. Haley House also hosts community events like movie screenings and art performances.

The Food Project

<http://thefoodproject.org/>

The Food Project can be credited with building a model for “engaging young people in personal and social change through sustainable agriculture” that has been copied nation-wide. Started in 1991, the Food Project now works with thousands of volunteers and over a hundred teens on their 37 acres of property in the eastern Massachusetts towns and cities of Beverly, Boston, Ipswich, Lincoln, and Lynn. The Food Project’s teens develop further leadership skills through positions of responsibility on the Food Project’s Farmers’ Market stand and Community Supported Agriculture program. In addition to teen training, The Food Project offers numerous training programs about growing food to the wider community.

Tufts Food System Planning Coalition

<http://www.go.tufts.edu/foodplanning>

The Tufts Food System Planning Coalition (established 2009) is a group of students from Tufts University representing the Friedman School of Nutrition, the Department of Urban and Environmental Policy and Planning, and the Fletcher School of International Affairs. The coalition is collaborating to bring awareness to Tufts about the food system as an essential network that deserves attention by planners and the role of planning in bring healthy food to all communities.

LOCAL FOOD BLOGS

Boston Localvores

<http://bostonlocalvores.org/>

Launched in 2008, Boston Localvores has recently ended their blogging but information will remain on the site, including their “Resources” section which has many links to area organizations, restaurants, farmers markets, and other blogs.

Food In Boston

<http://foodinboston.com/>

A great blog with valuable resources like a list of stores in the Boston area and surrounding suburbs where consumers can buy unique and local items. The blog also lists area food events, food-related organizations, restaurants of note, farmers’ markets, and pick-your-own farms.

Urban Homesteaders’ League

<http://www.urbanhomesteadersleague.org/>

Started in 2009, the Urban Homesteader’s League has grown from a simple community group hosting Do-It-Yourself skill shares to a full-fledged urban agriculture and homesteading clearinghouse. The “Events” page of their blog is a great source for any food-related activities and events in the greater Boston area.

URBAN AGRICULTURE AND GARDENS

Boston Area Community Gardens

<http://www.bostonnatural.org/cgFind.htm>

The Boston area proudly boasts nearly 200 community and school gardens, including one of the nation’s last remaining World War Two victory gardens -- the Fenway Victory Gardens. This site (maintained by the Boston Natural Areas Network) is searchable by garden name or neighborhood, and offers contact information and links to garden websites, as well as maps and directions to the gardens.

Earthworks Boston

<http://earthworksboston.org/home>

Earthworks maintains urban orchards at many city parks, community centers and gardens, former house lots, church yards, housing developments and cooperatives, public and private schools, museums, and even in the Boston Harbor Islands National Park Area.

Earthworks Urban Orchards program is one part of a larger program to connect local communities with open space and with each other. They offer training programs that cover specific horticultural topics, as well as courses on urban orchard maintenance. Urban Orchard tours are available.

ReVision Urban Farm

<http://www.vpi.org/Farm/index.htm>

ReVision House and ReVision Urban Farm is a community-based non-profit that was started in 1990 with the goal of giving shelter and support to pregnant and parenting homeless women. The one acre urban farm sits on land in Dorchester that was converted from abandoned lots, and is now a vibrant and productive source of fresh food for the women of ReVision House and the wider community. ReVision Urban Farm operates a Community Supported Agriculture program to support operations.
